Free Speech Curbs Face High Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two appeals testing the limits of free speech in America's fast-paced society confront the Supreme Court when it returns Tuesday from a two-week recess.

Together, the cases question whether rights granted by the Constitution in a more casual time should be trimmed by authorities to spare citizens from nuisances.

Except for this common theme, the appeals are diverse.

One centers on the Rev. Vernon C. Lyons, a Baptist minister in Chicago. The other concerns two New York groups protesting the war in Vietnam.
